

The California Limited: Tenth Season, 1904-1905, Santa Fe (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The California Limited: Tenth Season, 1904-1905, Santa Fe Early in the evening of a winters day, yet the red walls of La Grande station, Los Angeles, are beautified by blooming roses, and in the miniature park are calla lilies and geraniums, fragrant and lovely. Graceful palms bend over the driveways. The air is balmy, like summer. Cabs whirl up to the curb and travelers descend, hurry across the sidewalk, and enter the station - stopping, per haps, to buy tickets and have their baggage checked then passing to the platform, where a long train is waiting. At San Francisco, in the morning, other travelers were likewise leaving California for the East. Ahead may be heard the impatient engine, anxious to begin its relay contest with mountain grades and prairie winds. This luxurious train is certainly inviting so warm, so full of light and color! It is to be a home on wheels for many travelers during the next three days en route from sunland to snowland. Congenial persons - educated, refined, and well dressed - are the kind one meets here hence the journey is sure to be pleasant socially, a point worth considering.
