

Catching the Fall: Christian Fiction

Meredith and David Fiddler looked at Joshua as he slept peacefully in his hospital bed. His four-year-old body was sprawled at an odd angle to accommodate the apparatus that elevated his broken right leg. The doctor said it was a bad break, Meredith whispered. They had to put pins in. I should have seen him trip. I should have been there to catch him. This is all my fault. A single tear rolled down Merediths cheek. Her dark eyes were filled with pain and self-recrimination. I shouldnt have let him play tag with the other kids, she moaned.
