

Extracts Relating to the Indians - Notebook 1

For the first time, Henry David Thoreaus unpublished Indian notebooks will be available. This, the first in a series of eleven notebooks, will comprise a complete set of Thoreaus collected extracts from his extensive reading of North Americas cultural anthropology. Everywhere in our corn and grain fields the earth is strewn with the relics of a race, which has vanished as completely as if trodden in with the earth- When I meditate on the destiny of this prosperous branch of the Saxon family, and the exhausted energies of this new country-I forget that what is now Concord was once Musketaquid, And that the American race has had its history- The future reader of history will associate his generation with the red man in his thoughts, and give it credit for some sympathy with that race.
