

Swanns Way

Swanns Way is the first novel of Marcel Prousts seven-volume magnum opus In Search of Lost Time. Following the narrators opening ruminations about the nature of sleep is one of 20th-century literatures most famous scenes: the eating of the madeleine soaked in a decoction of lime-flowers, the associative act from which the remainder of the narrative unfurls. After elaborate reminiscences about his childhood with relatives in rural Combray and in urban Paris, Prousts narrator recalls a story regarding Charles Swann, a major figure in his Combray childhood, and his escapades in 19th-century privileged Parisian society, revolving around his obsessive love for young socialite Odette de Creacy. Filled with searing, insightful, and humorous criticisms of French society, this novel showcases Prousts innovative prose style. With narration that alternates between first and third person, Swanns Way unconventionally introduces Prousts recurring themes of memory, love, art, and the human experience - and for nearly a century, audiences have deliciously savored each moment.
