And when she saw her time upon a day To visiten this Damian goth this May, And subtilly this letter down she threst Under his pillow, read it if him lest. She takth him by the hand, and hard him twist So secretly, that no wight of it wist, 9880 And bade him be all whole; and forth she went To January, when he for her sent. Up riseth Damian the nexte morrow, All passed was his sickness and his sorrow. When they them narrow advise:1 When they closely consider. He combeth him, he proineth1 him and picketh, He doth all that his lady list and liketh; 9886 And eke to January he goth as low, As ever did a dogge for the bow. He is so pleasant unto every man, (For craft is all, whoso that do it can,) That every wight is fain to speak him good; And fully in his ladys grace he stood. Thus let I Damian about his need, And in my tale forth I will proceed. Some clerkes holden that felicity Stands in delight, and therefore certain he, This noble January, with all his might In honest wise as longeth to a knight, Shope2 him to liven full deliciously: His housing, his array, as honestly3 9900 To his degree was maked as a kings. Amonges other of his honest things He had a garden walled all with stone, So fair a garden wot I nowhere none. For out of doubt I verily suppose, That he that wrote the Romance of the Rose, Ne could of it the beauty well devise: Ne Priapus ne mighte not suffice, Though he be god of gardens, for to tell The beauty of the garden, and the well, 9910 That stood under a laurel always green. Full often time he, Pluto, and his queen, Proserpina, and alle their faerie,
